SECURITY COUNCIL

(UN)B.R.O.D.Z.I.K

The second day in the Security Council started from the punishments, as the delegates of the UK, Turkey and Germany were late for the debates and some of them, like the delegate of Brazil haven't even shown up. Among many fantastic tasks, there was a lap dance to "Sex Bomb" performed by the delegate of France, Russian Federation and Germany as well as singing "Careless whisper". After all the punishments, it was a high time to start the conference. There was a 10 minutes Moderated Caucus on proposition of the delegate of DPRK, 15 minutes of P5 Caucus, Caucus on Iran deal. Further discussions were interrupted by a sudden crisis – biological virus spread by ISIS. After success of the resolution during the crisis, there was a quick break, during which we handed out the ELMUNdo copies. Immodestly, we have to admit that they seemed to like it because some of them were reading it throughout the debates. 30 minutes caucus on Syrian chemical weapons was undoubtedly one of the most heated discussion in this committee. Of course, it wouldn't be the Security Council if nobody felt offended at some point. Sadly, this part of the debate was not so formal because some delegates were laughing, eating or even biting their nails. Since it's the second day of the debates all members of the committee started to work on the resolutions. We have to admit that although there were many expelling aspects, at the end of the day they managed to establish one that pleased everyone, at least in most cases.

As you probably remember from our previous article, there was an incident with Russia's, the USA's and UK's placards on which there were insults. The insults were supposed to be erased by the delegate of France and the delegate of China, however the tables turned and all of a sudden the Chairs erased it. To be honest, the second day was full of chaos, therefore - many punishments. Once again, our favourite ones included singing and dancing to High School Musical hit – Breaking free. That was a punishment for both of Chairs and the delegate from France and the delegate of China. There were also many surprising moments, for example the unexpected appearance at the end of debates of the representative of Brazil or, even more jaw-dropping, the proposition to call one of the documents made during the debates "(UN)B.R.O.D.Z.I.K". Sadly, the Chairs rejected this idea.

HUMAN RIGHTS

The Awakening of the Committee

The topic of today's discussion has been forced labour and debt bondage. Nevertheless the delegates didn't get a chance to start as the gathering of General Assembly interrupted them. The Human Rights Committee and United Nations Office On Drugs And Crime have been brought together to solve a problem of a victim that escaped from a drug cartel, where she has been forced to work. The smugglers threatened to kill 200 of their workers unless the authorities agree to let them out and transfer to Mexico. During the debates two points of view have been presented, one was peaceful and consisted of using tracking devices on drug dealers and letting them out, the other wanted to use military forces. Some of the delegates weren't convinced about the honesty of the victim, believing it to be only a set up. In the end, everyone agreed letting the members of the cartel out, firstly providing them with the tracking devices. In contrast of the previous day, when the debates were dominated by only four delegates, today more representatives have been active participants, making the talks even more interesting. The first part of the discussion focused on the situation in Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Russian Federation. While all delegates were able to present proofs of the violation of human rights in said countries, the delegates denied the existence of the problem. The delegate of DPRK failed to give any clear answers to prove the lack of the problem, constantly confusing the other members of the committee with their odd statements, like claiming people from Korea don't run away but simply migrate or that delegates can't understand their situation because they have never been there. Later on, France brought up the situation in which Russian government has used forced labourers from North Korea in building the stadium for the World Cup. The delegate from the Russian Federation said that the accusations are false and there is no forced labour in their country because they value freedom even more than the USA. The delegate claimed that there is no proof of that issue in Russia and if the other delegates can present such evidence, it is simply their propaganda. That speech has earned quite a laugh from everyone. After a prolonged first debate, the committee moved on to the forced labour in more economically developed countries. The delegates started discussing ways to improve their situation and surprisingly China decided to join in, only to criticise their actions, saying they should focus on their own countries and not comment on the situation in others. All delegates felt offended by the statement of the Chinese delegate and wanted a formal apology, which has been provided. Then the delegates moved to the topic of USA using forced workers from Mexico also addressing the problem of illegal migration. Forming of the resolution happened to be quite easy, as all the delegates agreed with each other on the abolition of forced labour. The final resolution emphasised the importance of protecting workers, having more control over the industries like manufactures, agriculture, protecting victims of forced labour, making high-profit corporations responsible for their supply chains, raising awareness on the problem, education and giving the same opportunities to both genders. The delegates also reminded of the importance of sharing data between the countries. The resolution passed, with everyone in favour. Of course, a meeting without a punishment wouldn't be complete. In the first one delegates had to rap the International Declaration of Human Rights and then sing a song from High School Musical, where the delegate of Korea didn't even watch the movie! But nevertheless, delegates proved to be very talented.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

Demolishing walls, vanishing Chairs and grammar errors

Friday's debates opened with the remaining issue on the topic of migrant smuggling. Unexpectedly, during the time devoted to set the house's final resolution, the USA Delegate changed their policy on migrant security measures on the country's borders. To everyone's astonishment, on this decision of the American Delegation, the wall between the USA and Mexico is no longer considered a solution of the problem. This has allowed the house to finally come to an agreement, so we are not sure whether this decision was made due to a sudden change of heart or simply to accelerate the debates. However, after the agreement, the Chairs proceeded to the other topic concerning gender pay gap. A heated debate started after all countries presented their policy statements on the topic. The Delegates started to exchange points of information, even in the form of accusations which resulted in formal apologies. Apart from that, the committee tackled the issue of how stereotypes, beliefs and culture, especially Middle Eastern culture, influence the discrimination of women in their earnings. When all Delegates were ready to finish the debates and proceed to vote upon the resolutions, plagiarism in Russia's and Australia's draft was discovered. Unsurprisingly, it was recognized by the alert Delegates of Germany and France. As the Chairs and Secretary General followed with an investigation, it turned out that it was the Australian Delegate who added parts of a document she had found online. Thus, she was suspended from the debates and gained the status of an observer all throughout the debates. She has stated an official apology for that, however she could not participate in the debates and vote anymore. When it comes to the more unusual occurrences in our committee - one of our Chairs, Kornel, suddenly disappeared from the room. At the same time, the UNESCO committee welcomed a new Delegate - of Armenia, who performed a memorable dance there. As Kornel returned to EcoSoc, he seemed quite sweaty and was missing a tie, which leaves us wondering what he might have been doing while he was missing. Apart from that, throughout the duration of the session, the Delegate of Belgium was constantly seeking attention from the press. We were surprised that our presence during the debates was noticed, especially with such a dynamic exchange of views constantly happening, but this is our response to the Delegate's wish to be mentioned in our article. During the second day of debates, we could also hear some phrases that soon became quite iconic. After many grammar errors and acts of insubordination of the Delegates, (and, probably, many hours spent not sleeping), our Chairs, instead of saying "The official language of this conference is English", confusedly produced the phrase: "we would like to remind you that the official language is formal language". "That would not be in order due to time restrictions" - this phrase has also been mentioned many times by our dear yet tired Chairs, as the EcoSoc committee could not reach an agreement regarding the second resolution. Like the day before, we could notice the most persistent Delegates: France, Germany, Belgium, the Russian Federation and the USA. As the policy of France and Germany was not the one obtained by Russia, the house could not come to terms and it took some time before the debaters finally voted upon all the amendments and the resolution was ready. The house has chosen to present this resolution during the Closing Ceremony, and to the satisfaction of the Delegates, they could finally go and rest.

UNESCO

Censored whisper

The second day of the StetiMUN Conference was full of surprises for the UNESCO Committee. At first glance it was visible, that most of the participants seemed tired, but fortunately with every speech more energy was being pumped to them. The delegates were discussing the resolutions of the topic which was taken up the previous day. Later they started the argufy about the removal of the symbols of former totalitarian systems as a way of whitewashing history, which ended up with another two resolutions to choose from. The representative of France kept giving more and more new amendments to them. The resolutions that won in voting were: the first one about the topic of the limitation and control of information flow used as a political weapon- created by the delegates from Russia in cooperation with the USA ; the second one about the topic of the history whitewashing- made by deputies from Poland in cooperation with France and Germany. The whole dispute about distorting the historical truth and spreading fake news ended up in creation of a great idea of dealing with the remains of former totalitarian systems. Participants came to the conclusion, that totalitarian, for example, monuments have to be put in special museums, instead of being placed in the public space. The important event during that day discussion was definitely "the discovery of censorship". Delegates found out that for offensive statements the deputy can be censored for a certain period of time, which basically means that particular participant can't take part in the discussion or vote until the time of the censorship is up. The delegate who met with this condition the most often that day was the Democratic People's Republic of Korea deputy. She used harmful language, for example, approaching to the delegate of Japan or USA. Comparing Japanese people to "monkeys" or calling the actions of the USA government "idiotic" were the reasons why she had to stay quiet for so long. Sometimes even the Chairs were giving someone the censorship- the German representative got it for breaking the Human Rights or Belarus for not reasoning her vote in the resolution. But those weren't the only that day's rebels. The biggest drama queen was the deputy of Iran, who was arguing with everyone about everything and voting against almost every movement and resolution. He even had a quarrel with the Saudic Arabia delegate about the islam religion. Deputies of Chile, China, Ukraine and the United Kingdom behaved much more peaceful. The day seemed fruitful even for the Columbia representative: he said something from his own will- he asked for water. In the middle of the day something unusual happened- the Armenian deputy from the ECOSOC Committee came to the UNESCO room and started accusing the delegate of Turkey of the war in his country. He insisted on the Turkish representative to give an official apology, but because he didn't want to, he had to perform a lap dance on Chair Natan to the song "Carless whisper" by George Michael. The Armenia delegate showed him how to do it first and it was really impressive. But it wasn't the only funny punishment that day. The other one's included: butt spelling "UNESCO" by the Chairs, dancing to "You're the one that I want" from the musical Grease by the Korea and Iran representatives and singing the American national anthem by (again) the Korea delegate. As a summary of two days of debates in the UNESCO Committee we made a short interview with the participants. We asked them what in their opinion was the most interesting part of the discussion. Most of them said that they appreciated the most the fight between the DPRK and USA or all the punishments in general. Despite all the differences in points of view- this year's StetiMUN Conference was a wonderful experience for all of us.

COUNTER-TERRORISM COMMITTEE

ISIS comes up against a wall

When the Counter-Terrorism Committee started its meeting at 9:00, two things could immediately be noticed – the absence of the delegates of Iraq and Italy, and the delegate of Egypt's bright pink socks, which provided a nice continuation to yesterday's collies (or dachshunds, the mystery remains unsolved). On the basis of yesterday's opposing resolutions, the delegate of Ireland created a solution that was the best of both worlds. With only two votes against, the resolution passed. And after fifteen minutes of unmoderated caucus, the delegates voted for their amendments and quickly proceeded to approving the resolution with no votes against, which swiftly ended the discussion on the first topic. In the meantime, the delegate of Iraq arrived 36 minutes late and attempted to elude punishment by saying he lived in a different time zone – he was later punished anyway, along with the delegates of the UK, who spoke Polish instead of English during the sitting, and of France, who was wearing inappropriate clothes – torn jeans. The time for punishments, however, came later, as the delegate of Italy was still missing at the time. The delegates then proceeded to the roll call and delivered their policy statements on the second topic – the immigration crisis. Most of them expressed the will to co-operate with one another. After this part of the sitting, during which some of the delegates forgot (or pretended to have forgotten) how to pronounce the word „China” (by saying „Ja-i-Na” in the manner of Donald Trump), the Chairs decided that it was no use waiting for the delegate of Italy any longer and proceeded to executing the punishments. The delegate of Iraq had to sing „Hakuna Matata”, the delegate of the UK was to twerk, but she was interrupted abruptly by the Secretary General herself, who instructed the entire committee to rush to the emergency General Assembly. Once there, the CTC joined the Security Council in addressing the urgent threat from ISIS. The terrorist group threatened to unleash an incurable virus, unless the UN met its ludicrous demands which were the official recognition of the Islamic State on the map and admitting it to the UN, especially the SC. The intelligence regarding the virus was given by an expert summoned by the Secretary General. The delegates of both committees proceeded to co-operate in finding a solution to the issue. It was halfway through the discussions when the delegate of Italy finally appeared, 2 hours and 36 minutes late. After moderated and unmoderated caucuses the delegates divided into two main parties – one for the nuclear option and one for gradual advances on ISIS. When opinions of all of the countries were polarised, there was a motion to start an unmoderated caucus for preparation of draft resolutions. During the caucus, the delegates of Russia, Libya and the UK attempted to involve a member of the press (one of the authors of this very article) in the sitting of the two committees. The journalist would have had to appear before the assembly as a Russian expert who had found the cure for the virus. The press team must remain impartial and silent at all times during the debates, their role is to be the eyes and ears and never the voice. The alliance eventually had a non-MUN participant portray the said scientist without anybody's consent and failed to produce a draft resolution, expecting the scientist to be the ace in their sleeve. As a result, the opposition (France, China and the USA) had the only existing draft resolution at the time. This resolution, however, was not passed and changes had to be made. The Russian side managed to construct a draft resolution, the French side chose to alter their weapon of choice from nuclear warhead to EMP. While a third draft was created by the delegate of Ireland, both alliances voted against it in hopes of their drafts being passed. In the end, the coalition of Russian Federation, Libya and the UK had their resolution passed and the conflict was resolved without the use of the scientist. The CTC returned to their conference room and straight away the UK's delegate's punishment was continued as she resumed the previously-interrupted twerking. It was soon followed by the punishment of the delegate of France in the form of singing Smash Mouth's hit „All Star”. The last punishment before resuming the debate was the one of the delegates of Italy, Bartłomiej Celt (to whom we offer the most sincere apology for misspelling his name in the last article). He was to sing the Soviet anthem, which he did with utmost pleasure. After the lunch break, the committee proceeded to a moderated caucus and making the draft resolutions. The only one formed was that of the USA and the UK, with other nations generally agreeing with its content. The remaining time was spent on negotiating the amendments and nearly unanimously passing the final resolution with only Germany voting against. The resolution established a new organisation called the International Border Control Alliance (IBCA), whose sole purpose is to control and monitor illegal immigration. After passing the resolution, the delegates raised a motion to conclude the meeting, hereby ending all negotiations in the Counter-Terrorism Committee.

OFFICE OF DRUGS AND CRIME COMMITTEE

House, come to order!

Eventful. That is the term indisputably describing the second day of the heated debates in the United Nations Office of Drugs and Crime Committee. However, was it the topic of legal highs that brought forth such passionate atmosphere? Or maybe it was the punishments that generated the excitement among the delegates? Read the article, in order to get to know all the hot secrets and gossips of the Committee! The debates of the previous day seemed to have been so furious and of such intensity, that they left some of the participants with an unbearable emotional baggage, leading them to arrive late to the session. The representative of China was among the affected, as he managed to join the debate no sooner than the Crisis- that being the emergency case involving the mass suicide of a sect trafficking drugs. Therefore, as each crime deserves a punishment, after finding the solution to the issue by the United Nations Office of Drugs and Crime Committee and the Human Rights Council, we proceeded to the disciplinatio n of the previously mentioned delegate of China. Despite the fact that the performance of a simple fitness training may seem to be a light and an innocent penalty, obviously there had to be a twist. The said twist involved the completion of the workout while reading out the naughtiest bits of '50 shades of Grey', which definitely proved to be exhilarating, as well as controversial. Nevertheless, it was not this aspect of the meeting that caused the most controversy. The delegates encountered some problems with the resolution from yesterday. Majority of the points of it turned out to be inappropriate, therefore it wasn't accepted by the Secretariat, resulting in the Secretary General herself to intervene.

It was probably the main reason why the representatives became distracted and did not focus fully on the discussions, although it could also have had something to do with the hunger for knowledge, as well as the literal hunger, resulting in the infamous delegate of Slovenia making the following statement: 'In motion of personal privilege, is it possible to order pizza while debate?'. As delegates were constantly laughing, the Chairs had to intervene – the sentence 'Chatting is not in order' was heard an enormous number of times. All in all, besides some inconveniences and shocking suggestions, such as the one of the delegate of Venezuela to exterminate all drug dealers, the Chairs consider the session a fruitful one as the nations managed to establish a successful resolution to the issue of legal highs, proposing mutual cooperation and the creation of a transnational organization responsible for decreasing the problem.

INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT

ICC – really emotional!

The day started with the presentation of the evidences by Defence. As the first evidence they depicted Koran, but Prosecution raised an objection, which was accepted by the President of International Criminal Court. The defence had to find other ways to prove the innocence of Salman ibn Abd al-Aziz Al Su'ud. They said that king Salman wasn't aware of the circumstances of the bomb attack. The Prosecution raised an objection and The Head of the Jury ordered voting. By reason of absence of one of the judges, the President of ICC, Alicja Cernohorska had to vote for him. As the third proof the Defence showed an article, which said king Salman wasn't able to make any decisions, but the prosecutor Aleksandra Twardowska noticed a negation of it in the same paragraph of the text. Then we were provided with another mark: Salman was not responsible for Saudi-Arabian intervention in Yemen. Five minutes later one of the prosecutors noted that the king was increasing in power and that this country was monarchy and Salman is in charge of every action of his country. The next part of the debate was about king Salman's power over the country, the relations between him and his son. Next we had a chance to see other evidences like photos and video materials provided by both sides of the conflict. Chairs started the next part of trial, examining the witnesses.. The first witness was Teresa Sanaprisova, who presented her position. King's son, Muhammad ibn Salman ibn Abd al-Aziz Al Su'ud came as the second witness, claimed that he had had an argument with his father and they didn't get on well with each other. He also said that they attacked hospital in Yemen, because it was impossible to avoid it. The next witness named Muhammad Aatif, who was the victim of bombarding, was behaving in a very emotional way, so the President of ICC expelled him from the court. The subsequent witness, the Prime Minister of Saudi-Arabia testified that the only reason why they intervened in Yemen was the fact they wanted to bring peace. Another witness, Ali Abduh Saleh said Salman was simply using the situation in his country to take the throne. After those testimonies we had a break and during this time, one of member of Defence Asger Weinberg left without telling anyone, which was very surprising. At the end of examinations, the court interrogated the king. He denied he was personally responsible for the situation in Yemen. He also said he gave the throne to his son, because of his weak condition and age. Salman confirmed he suffered from Alzheimer and dementia and said that his son was responsible for all the attacks in Yemen. Then both sides prepared their closing statements. The Defence Office declared that the evidences provided by them showed Salman's innocence. The Head of the Jury and the President of ICC appointed 30 minutes break for the judges to decide about the verdict. The judge said that Salman ibn Abd al-Aziz Al Su'ud was guilty and sentenced him to prison for 5 years. Today's trial was a very emotional, however fruitful debate, which ended over two hours later than intended, because everybody wanted to do their best.

DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMME COMMITTEE

Grande Finale

At first the debates were arduous. The delegates were unconscious and some of them were late (which might have been caused by the yesterday's MUN party). They showed lack of interest to the representatives of USA, UK and Japan when they were trying to point out important changes in the amendments to the resolution of the first problem, which was averting famine in South Sudan, Somalia, Nigeria and Yemen, by constantly scrolling through their Facebook profiles and talking with each other. They had to be brought back into order. What is more, on the day of this debate, the habit of keeping hands in pockets was common among all of the delegates. The representative of Saudi Arabia and Poland had problems with stating their position papers – they caused some controversy in the group, but actually that contributed to the awakening of other delegates. They became much more active and started asking unhandy questions, that earlier mentioned delegates didn't exactly knew answers to. They were confused and lost in their own words. The good thing was, the delegates of the countries with LGBTI-unfriendly views did not try to change them or excuse them, they firmly stood by them, except that at some point the delegate of China seemed to forget he was supposed to present his country's point of view, not his own. However, there was a visible change in his demeanor for he had his own laptop and was eager to work with other delegates. We could see he took some steps to prepare himself better than he did yesterday. We managed to note that the delegates were encircling around the fact, that education in all countries is necessary to make people aware of the needs of LGBTI community members and by that they meant the same laws that regard the heterosexual couples. Until they were urged by the Chairs, the representatives of Asian countries were not willing to talk and discuss this important subject. That was the reason why the discussion turned into a semi-moderated course. The representatives were going off topic and the Chairs thought that this form would lead to solving the actual problem. We think that although UNDP delegates were definitely more open and active, the weren't effective in their actions. The debates kept on going, but they couldn't make up their mind. Finally the Chairs decided to lead them a little, so that they would understand better what the crux of the second topic really was – finding a resolution to stop the discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, gender identity or intersex on the asian continent. The final draft resolution was presented by the delegate of Japan. After making some amendments, the entire committee proceeded to showcase their speeches. Japan and United Kingdom representatives spoke in favour whilst Saudi Arabia delegate declared himself on the opposite side. The voting resulted in the majority of voices approving the resolution. At the end the Chairs decided to punish every delegate one last time for all of their disobediences.

THANK YOU

LAST, BUT NOT LEAST !

After these three amazing days at the StetiMUN 2017 conference during which you, all the participants, the whole team of organisers, including press, were working very hard. Even though MUN is not an easy event to prepare we had a lot of fun and we hope you did too! We want to thank you for your involvement, a friendly atmosphere, which was very dense in some committees, and a FRUITFUL debates. All that we do, we do because of you and we strongly hope that you like the results of our work. As Heads of Press at this year's edition we would like to thank as frankly as it is possible to our best Press Director, Mrs Krystyna Kwiatkowska, who was always very helpful and full of good advice no matter how late in the night it was. The same enormous thanks are directed to the StetiMUN's main organisers, Mrs Edyta Ostapkowicz and Mrs Karolina Brzezińska. Without their involvement and availability to everyone who was connected to the MUN, this conference would never have happened.

Also, from our position, we want to thank very much our wonderful and really well-cooperative team. Photographers, who did a great job preparing a perfect material for the articles and StetiMUN Facebook Page. They were running from one part of school to another whenever we called them to capture important moments. Our amazing journalists, staying up late and doing their best so the articles are interesting and professional. And our Graphic Managers, staying even longer, to prepare EIMUNdo for printing. Without all of your engagement and a huge passion to our tasks our EIMUNdo would never exist. This is all our team who have worked all three days and three nights barely sleeping to make our communal newspaper. This year, we were really honoured to call ourselves "Heads of Press Team" and work as leaders of the Press. The collaboration with all of you, brought us a lot of happiness and we are very proud of the results :)
